Flood Insurance

Don't wait to get flood insurance.

You probably haven't thought about flood insurance, and most likely you won't... until you need it. However, once the rain begins, it's already too late. Flood insurance needs to be in place 30 days before flooding happens—all the more reason for you to think ahead.

Many standard homeowners policies don't cover flood events, and yours may be one of them. Don't wait until after the next rainstorm, river overflow, snow melt, or hurricane ruins your furniture, appliances, electronics, and clothing—all the things you carefully chose to make the house you live in your home. Talk to your agent today about the value of a flood insurance policy from Selective.

Should I have flood insurance?

If you live in a higher risk flood zone you are probably aware you should carry flood insurance. But properties outside of flood zones can still be susceptible to flooding, including buildings in lower elevations or near a water source like a river or lake. If this describes your house or business, you should carefully consider flood insurance.

What about the cost?

Ruined carpeting, appliances, electronics, and furniture — when you take into account the replacement costs you would have to assume for all your damaged or destroyed property, you can't afford to not have flood insurance. Plus, with the new federal revisions of the national flood zones, people in low risk areas may qualify for Preferred Risk Policies, which offer lower rates to help homeowners like you.
